William Lescaze

Pioneer of Modernism in American Architecture

William Lescaze (1896-1969) was a Swiss-born American architect, city planner, industrial designer and teacher. After studying architecture in Switzerland, he relocated to the United States and formed a partnership with George Howe in 1929. In 1932 at Howe & Lescaze he designed the PSFS building in Philadelphia—the first international modernist skyscraper. In 1935 Lescaze established his own office in New York. His work includes the CBS building on Sunset Boulevard in Los Angeles and the Williamsburg Houses, a groundbreaking 20-building modernist housing project.

Egon Eiermann

Proportions, Precision and Structural Clarity

Egon Eiermann (1904-1970) was a renowned, multi award-winning German architect, furniture designer and teacher. His work is defined by simplicity and by a design approach that always makes a product's function clearly visible. He studied architecture in Berlin before moving to Karlsruhe in 1947 where he was Professor of Architecture at the Technical University. The German pavilion at the Brussels World Expo and the Berlin Memorial Church are among his most famous buildings.

Max Bill

Beauty from Function, Beauty as Function

Max Bill (1908-1994) was a Swiss architect, graphic designer, product designer, artist, sculptor, politician and teacher. First trained as a silver smith before studying at the Bauhaus Dessau, he taught in Zurich, Hamburg, Berlin and was a founding member and director of the Ulm School of Design. His work is included in major art museums around the world and many of his designs are still in production, including his watches for Junghans as well as the Ulm stool.
